One of the things moviegoers like most about going to theatres is seeing films on the Big Screen, "the way they were meant to be seen." What people don't realize is that when films started in the mid-1890s, there were neither screens nor projectors.

The very short films of that era were meant to be seen individually by looking into peep show machines in arcades. Those Kinetoscope devices were one of many inventions from Thomas Edison's factory in West Orange, NJ. Since Edison was monetizing his Kinetoscopes quite well, he had no interest in developing a machine to project film images on walls.

Others, however, saw a big future in showing films to groups of people. Peep show owners, in fact, were very vocal in pressing Edison to devise a way to show life size images on arcade walls. This led to the Vitascope projection system, developed by Washington, DC inventor Thomas Armat, but then marketed by Edison's organization as if it were his own invention.

The first public Vitascope screening took place April 23, 1896 at Koster & Biel's Music Hall, a vaudeville house in New York's Herald Square at 34th Street near Broadway, the site today of Macy's. It would have premiered three days earlier, but it took longer than expected to install the machinery. That first night audience was dazzled by film images projected on a 20 foot canvas screen set within a gilded frame. What they saw is detailed in Terry Ramsaye's 1926 film history book A Million and One Nights: "...a dash of prize fight, several dancing girls who displayed their versatility to the camera and... the surf at Dover, England (which the audience thought was) from down the New Jersey coast." To this very day, sex, violence and spectacle are still attracting movie audiences. Projection caught on immediately, but the Vitascope didn't last. Once Edison recognized the business advantages of projection vs. peep shows, Vitascope found itself with no new films to show. Early audiences wanted to see new films after they'd seen the first ones. Vitascope's original celluloid film strips wore out from repeated projection and it didn't have new product -- but Edison and others at the time did. As the movie industry developed, early exhibitors saw the value of going into production to guarantee they'd always have enough product to show. Now, about 125 years later, nothing's changed. Exhibitors and studios still need each other to make the film business work.

SBA To Reopen Applications For Covid-19 Relief For Movie Theater, Live Venues (Deadline)

The U.S. Small Business Association announced that it would begin accepting applications for its Shuttered Venue Operators Grants (SVOG) beginning on Monday, April 26th at 12:00pm ET. In fact, this round is a reboot of an earlier, failed introduction of the website to accept SVOG applications, which was plagued with technical problems when it debuted originally on April 8th. The SVOG program was established to provide financial assistance to movie theatres on other public venues offering live entertainment to the public, a sector which has been decimated by the health and safety restrictions enforced to combat the COVID-19 pandemic. The program was set up to review and process grants on a first-come-first-serve basis, setting up a stampede mentality among desperate applicants. The amount of assistance available through the program is substantial, awarding grants equal to as much as 45% of the 2019 revenues for a venue. The SBA has used the time since its aborted launch on April 8th to resolve the underlying technical flaws of its website and streamline the user experience for applicants. Fingers crossed....

HBO And HBO Max Add 2.7M Subscribers In Q1; AT&T CEO John Stankey Declines To Offer Revised Streaming Metrics (Deadline)

Last week, AT&T's CEO John Stankey presented a rosy outlook to investors during the company's first quarter earnings call, including a net gain of 2.7M new subscribers combined for HBO channels on traditional cable and HBO Max streaming. Out of this number, 9.7M were reported to have signed on through distribution partners such as Roku, Apple TV and others. These numbers exceeded Wall Street's expectations and contributed to a lift in the company's earnings and stock price. Last December, AT&T's WarnerMedia division shocked the film industry by announcing that its Warner Bros. studio would release its entire slate of movies during 2021 both in theatres and on HBO Max streaming simultaneously, eliminating its long-standing practice of offering exhibitors an exclusive theatrical window during which to play its releases. At the time of that announcement, WB execs explained that this change was due to the unprecedented circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic, having closed or severely limited movie theatres in their ability to operate and draw the large audiences that blockbusters depend on to return a profit. HBO Max has trailed other front-line streaming services such as Netflix, Amazon Prime Video and Disney+ in subscriber counts. However, based on its recent success, studio execs are now projecting that the service will have up to 120M to 150M subscribers by 2025.

During Q1, Warner Bros. releases premiering on HBO Max included All the Little Things, Tom & Jerry and the much-hyped Zach Snyder cut of Justice League. Godzilla Vs. Kong debuted on the last day of the quarter, March 31st, with a buzz that is expected to move the needle on new subscriptions.

Netflix stock sinks amid subscriber slowdown

(Axios)

Netflix reported 3.98M new subscribers during Q1, growth that was significantly lower than the 6.2M predicted by Wall Street analysts. The streaming giant now projects that it will add a mere 1M new subscribers during Q2. Netflix's subscriber growth was bound to slow down after the torrid pace it set in 2020, propelled by a strong content lineup, new momentum in international markets and an eager audience stuck at home during the COVID pandemic and looking for safe entertainment options. On the bright side, the company predicts that it will break even or turn a slight profit during 2021 for the first time in its history.

Theaters Promote First-Ever Cinema Week to Encourage Moviegoing (Hollywood Reporter)

"It's time to get off the couch," says Brandon Jones, one of the founders of Cinema Week, a week-long event taking place from June 22-27 to promote a return to theatres and moviegoing. A wide swath of U.S. exhibitors will participate in marketing and hosting the week's activities which will include exclusive content, merchandise and special appearances from filmmakers and talent. Over half of U.S. exhibitors have announced their participation, with additional support from the industry groups the National Association of Theatre Owners (NATO) and the Independent Cinema Alliance (ICA). As exhibitors re-open after a year of closures and restrictions, they face the challenge of making the public aware that they are ready to welcome audiences back to their theatres to watch exciting new studio releases. It's no coincidence that Cinema Week will take place during the opening week of F9, Universal's latest chapter in the popular Fast and the Furious action series. Surveys have shown that consumers who return to cinemas have a positive experience, and thereafter they are much more likely to go back again as well as encourage others to do so.

Your Moviegoing Experience Is About to Change (The Atlantic)

This article from The Atlantic lays out what's in store for moviegoers when they return to cinemas after a year-long hiatus. As with many other industries, exhibitors have had a lot of time on their hands to reflect on how to upgrade their business to be more appealing to consumers and are now ready to show what they have come up with. Moviegoers can expect some or all of the following on your first trip back to the theatre.

- (1) Theatres will be more "digitized" – cashless transactions for ticketing and concessions, with apps on smartphones the norm.
- (2) Theatres will be more private – expect theatres to showcase the wonders of private auditorium rentals, seven days a week.

Screendollars · contactus@screendollars.com · (978) 494-4150

Thaddeus Bouchard, President · John Shaw, Communications · Tami Morris, Exhibitor Relations · Nicolas Bouchard, Film Distribution

- (3) Theatres want to be your first stop away from home – rejuvenated loyalty programs with active digital marketing will encourage customers to come back to the theater often. Alamo Drafthouse’s CEO Tim League commented, “I think we’re an out-of-home experience competing with bars and restaurants and nightclubs”
- (4) Theatres may still continue to close – some cinemas may not make it to the other side of the pandemic, succumbing to the pressure of going a year without income, dealing with ongoing capacity restrictions and requirements to retrofit facilities to meet new health regulations.

MARTIN GROVE’S Hollywood Report

The Golden Globes just went from being tarnished to being toxic.

After an email by former 8-term Hollywood Foreign Press Association president Phil Berk drew massive media coverage for its anti-Black Lives Matter comments, Comcast/Universal's NBC called for Berk's expulsion, leaving no doubt how seriously unhappy the network is with the GG.

Subsequently, Berk, an 88 year old South Africa native, was kicked out, two diversity experts retained by HFPA to help manage the last crisis quit and reports have the group's PR agency close to exiting. HFPA had promised NBC it would resolve its lack of diversity by early May by adding 13 qualified Black international journalists, bringing its membership total to 100. With Berk's ouster, there's now one more slot to fill and very little time left in which to do it.

NBC is reportedly paying HFPA & Dick Clark Productions about $60M annually through 2026. This year's GG telecast – NOMADLAND (pictured) won best picture-drama – saw a ratings plunge that's since been echoed by other awards events. Viewers are said to be particularly unhappy about how political preaching by winners now dominates such shows.

The doomsayers who made headlines last year by predicting moviegoing's demise are singing a different tune these days.

Wall Street analysts, who not so long ago were applauding the virtues of streaming, are now revising upwards their earnings projections for major theatre circuits. Media observers, who didn't believe moviegoers would return now that they can stream films at home, are now marveling at the quick turnaround at the multiplexes.

This weekend's lively launch for MORTAL KOMBAT & DEMON SLAYER THE MOVIE: MUGEN TRAIN (pictured) follows in the big box office footsteps of GODZILLA VS. KONG. Things are clearly looking up since the movie hating governors of NY & California, at last, let cinemas reopen (with capacity restrictions) & studios finally started releasing films people really want to see.

Moviegoers have eagerly returned, which augers well for the fast approaching summer season that's filled with tentpole movies. With increasing vaccination rates and a widespread decline in hospitalizations, audiences want to start enjoying films again on the big screen with their families & friends – and tubs of fresh, hot buttered popcorn!
